LEARNING IS A TWO-WAY STREET

When Marcos Goldchain steps in front of a group of Federal managers to teach them acquisition program management, he wonders what will come back at him from their direction. He's a skilled teacher and project manager, but he's quick to admit that his students always have something to teach him. "I love the two-way flow of information when I'm teaching," he says. "Part of the reason I love what I do is because I learn as much from them as they learn from me."

Marcos doesn't see teaching as a one-way flow of information. When it's a two-way street, he gets to keep his pulse on the latest practices and trends his clients deal with every day. The fact that they know their business and are immersed in it daily means they continually bring fresh information back to him.

Marcos' government and commercial clients appreciate his ability to bring them to a higher level of performance. Whether it's implementing new programs or teaching new technologies, he loves walking in their shoes and helping them hit a faster stride.
